It was originally a part of the diverse dances and games performed at royal feasts and courts in the Far Eastern countries, hence the name korean. It was brought to the United States in the late 1800s by a young Korean man named Sokeunn Low, who became the first World Taekwondo Champion in 1903. In the following years, the sport was refined, and had come to include self-defense, sports, and military uses. Today, the sport has branches all over the United States, and is practiced in over 1,000 schools and affiliate organizations throughout North America. It is the official sports of the United States Olympic Committee, the United States Taekwondo Union, and the United States Olympic Committee. It is also the number one martial art in the United States. History & Culture The word taekwondo means “to defeat the spear” in Korean. It refers to an ancient principle of fighting in which you strike your opponent with your spear while he is trying to strike you with his spear. In this art, the use of the arms is only second to that of the legs. The focus is on kicking, grabbing, throwing, blocking, and locking your opponent’s weapon arm. A lot of emphasis is put on maintaining balance and letting your momentum lead your movements. Different types of taekwondo (for example, kyorugi, which is a full-contact karate style, or nechiryojosei, which is a taekwondo based on Judo techniques) are developed from various cultural and historical influences and regions, and different schools and individual teachers often vary in their approaches. However, there are many similarities in the way the different schools use the same moves, including throwing the opponent, which can be utilized for self-defense. Taekwondo was first introduced to the United States in the late 19th century, but it was just becoming popular
